FONTVIEILLE LANDSCAPED PARK AND PRINCESS GRACE ROSE GARDEN

The Princess Grace Rose Garden was created in 1984, at the initiative of H.S.H. Prince Rainier III wished to create a memorial to his wife, the late Princess Grace, who had a great love of flowers.

To mark its 30th anniversary, the Rose Garden was expanded to cover 5,000 m², with 8,000 rose plants representing around 300 different varieties.

The Rose Garden has three priorities:

- Landscaping:

The garden has been enlarged and opened up, the lawns removed, and a 50 m long water feature created.

- Ecology: the garden's creation and maintenance is intended to be as environmentally friendly as possible. It has been awarded the "Ecological Plant Space

(EVE) label by the international body "Ecocert Environnement".

- Education: the garden is divided into eight areas with different themes, showcasing the history of roses, their links with the Princely Family and personalities, landscape roses in urban settings, and new varieties that have marked the development of modern roses through their beauty and strong fragrance.

The Rose Garden, the area around the pond, and the landscaped paths are accessible to wheelchair users and persons with reduced mobility.

The slopes are gentle.

The garden has specially adapted lavatories.

SAINT-MARTIN GARDENS

This green space was the first garden in the Principality to open to the public. In 1816, having already been through the ordeal of the Revolution and the Empire, the people of Monaco were faced with famine.

Prince Honoré V (1778 – 1841) decided to create work for them, by building the first public garden on an abandoned piece of land by the south-east wall of the Rock.

Between 1983 and 1986, the gardens were redeveloped by the Prince's Government.

They are now planted with numerous Mediterranean and European species, as well subtropical varieties that can be grown in the Principality thanks to the mild local climate.

This space is an important part of the open-air museum formed by the Principality's numerous gardens, and a preferred site for the sustainable management of green spaces.

It is one of the first gardens to be maintained using more environmentally-friendly methods.

The Saint-Martin Gardens ("EVE" certified since 2019) can be accessed via the entrances opposite the Cathedral or on the concourse in front of the Oceanographic Museum.

Please note that some slopes are quite steep.

JAPANESE GARDEN

The definitive Japanese garden created in Europe is to be found beside the sea in Monaco. It is a landscaped garden with pavilions, a tea house, and various styles laid out around a lake.

According to the Japanese designer, Mr Beppu, the ensemble comprises the three fundamental elements of landscaped gardens: a flat surface (the central lake), a point (the waterfall), and a curved line (the meandering path).

A stunning green space at the foot of the city itself, the Japanese garden is a stylised recreation of nature in all its glory, with its mountain, hill, waterfall, beach, and stream.

Covering some 7,000 m², the Japanese garden follows the strictest principles of compactness and enclosure derived from Zen teaching. The garden has EVE ecological certification.

Much of it is accessible.
